

Park, Y. (2022). Variable-centered and person-centered approaches to understanding a satisfying single life: A focus on singles’ social lives (Publication No. 28861057) [Doctoral dissertation, University of Toronto (Canada)]. ProQuest Dissertations & Theses Global.

The self, social networks, and psychological well-being

Cross-cultural differences in experiences of singlehood

Three essays on the origins and consequences of public service motives

Integrating social relationship dynamics into the association between emotional disturbances and physical health: A stress psychophysiological approach

The role of workplace supervisor support in caregivers' marital relationships

Investigating cardiovascular risk at the intersection of race, gender, and education

Meta-analyses of personality and cognitive ability

A global perspective on aging, adult health, and inequality

Self-rated health and perceived illness vulnerability as mediators of exercise and office visits

Minority health: Social inequalities, stressors, and self-rated health

The baby boomers meet menopause: Attitudes and roles

Investigating cardiovascular risk at the intersection of race, gender, and education

Short and long-term change in selective optimization with compensation strategies and the relationship to well being and stress in adulthood

Weighted down: A mixed methods investigation of the reproduction of fatness inequality

Health outcomes of family caregivers: Examining the role of spirituality and religion

The development of engagement and enjoyment: Understanding flow experiences across adulthood

Obesity, fat distribution, and nondiabetic glycemic control: Moderation by psychosocial factors

When combinations collide: Associations among multimorbidity, self-regulation, and functional status

The health behavior model of personality

A darker shade of blue: Depression predicts distortion in memory for daily emotional experience

Older adults and alcohol use: The impact of retirement and previous work experience

The self, social networks, and psychological well-being